Let's get this Degree

Between Mauj and Maqsad - A Guide on Back to Uni

It's official – classes at Denning Law School are back in session! After a much-needed winter break, the campus came alive once more on January 13th, buzzing with fresh energy, half-empty notes, and students resolving (or at least pretending) to start the semester strong. The corridors filled with chatter about holiday trips, wedding season chaos, and New Year's resolutions that already seem questionable. Whether you're still shaking off the holiday laziness or already knee-deep in case briefs, we've got you covered with some fun tips, a sprinkle of senior wisdom, and a whole lot of encouragement to survive and thrive this semester.

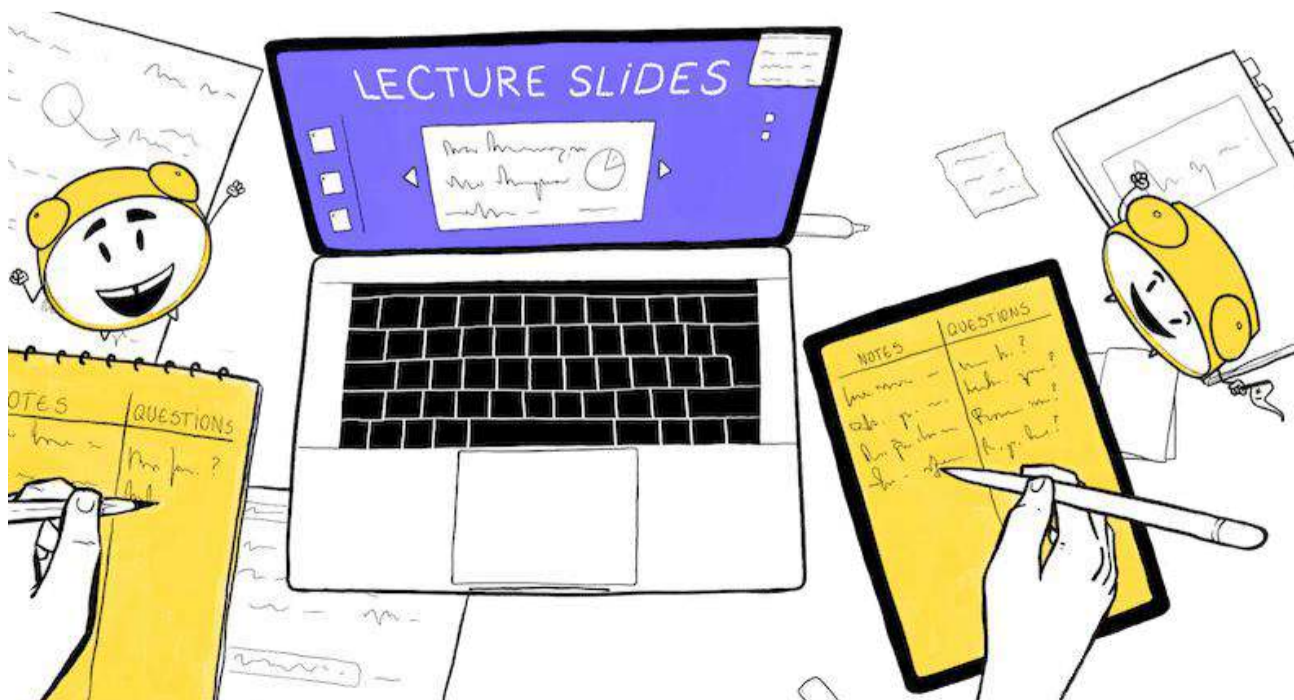

Being back to Uni can be an exciting time for few; like Mr Tipu who seemed absolutely ecstatic about returning and remarked "I'm so excited to be back in uni, especially since i get to sit in Sir Huzaifa's lectures with that one person who doesn't let me study"

While it can be daunting for the rest. "Returning to university after a break is like waking up from a nap you didn't mean to take. You're disoriented, slightly annoyed, but you know you have to get back to it because, unfortunately, naps don't grant degrees." added Yasir Haleem, a first year student at Denning.

Let's start with the advice that speaks to our souls, "Mauj masti nahi rukni chahiye" – iconic words from a senior whose priorities are nothing short of chef's kiss. Translation? Don't forget to enjoy yourself amidst the grind. Take those chai breaks, plan those impromptu hangouts, and soak up the little joys of life at Denning. After all, law school isn't just about textbooks and deadlines – it's also about making memories that you'll cherish long after you're done decoding legal doctrines.

"Mujhe koi demotivate nahi karsakta mene pehle hi apne aap ko demotivate kar rakha hai bas ab agle saal hi karoongi parhai" said Rabia, after being asked their academic plan for the new semester.

On the flip side, we have the ultra-focused seniors, likely with impressive distinction and merit medals gleaming in their future. Their mantra? It's high time to lock in and start preparing for exams. Midterms and finals might feel miles away, but trust us, they'll creep up faster than you can say "landmark judgment." Their pro tip? Start slow and steady – a little studying now could save you from pulling caffeine-fueled all-nighters later.

"Hum apko ye bilkul mashwara nahi dengay ke masti poori tarha rokdo lekin its time masti takes a break now" said Abiha Jatoi when asked for advice on how to proceed forth after being back from break, a bit dismayed.

When asked about the balance on masti and parhai, Filza, Miss President of Dialogues at Denning, couldn't resist saying, "Perh lo yaar, tumhare paas na beauty hai, na brains ka backup. Zindagi ka balance rakho class mein perhna aur cafeteria mein show lagana dono zaroori hain!" A bit too profound for our liking.

Now, here's where the opinions get spicy. Faculty, as expected, recommend attending marathon classes regularly (and by regularly, they mean every single day without fail). They believe consistency is key to academic glory, and who are we to argue? But let's not forget those unnamed, rogue seniors who swear by an entirely different philosophy – "skip the commute, stay in your pajamas, and self-study from home." While their arguments for avoiding the daily hustle of campus life are compelling, one has to admit: marathon classes sometimes do come in handy. The choice, dear reader, is yours – but choose wisely.

And let's not forget the social side of things. The semester is still young, which means there's plenty of time to forge friendships that might just last a lifetime. Lean on your classmates for notes, banter, and moral support. Connect with seniors who've been through it all – they might even have tips to save you from embarrassing library blunders or tricky viva moments. And, if nothing else, law school is a much smoother ride when you've got a squad by your side.

The real trick to surviving Denning? Finding the sweet spot between "mauj masti" and exam prep. You don't want to be the person partying the semester away without a care, but you also don't want to end up buried so deep in legal doctrines that you forget there's life beyond campus. Mix it up, stay balanced, and don't forget to savor every moment – after all, you're living through what will one day become your "good old days."

Denning isn't just a place to study – it's where memories are made, lessons are learned, and dreams take shape. Whether you're here for masti, lock in, or find your unique balance in between, make this semester one to remember. So, go forth, attend (or skip) those classes, but in Khayyam Jakhri's words, "Please study! Your ancestors will not come running from their graves to help you (not applying that to myself though but you really should)."

Subtle art of Corporate Slavery

A Heartfelt Rant by an Underpaid Employee :(

Desi weddings – the ultimate crash course in chaos theory. You’ve got uncles huddled around buffet tables, discussing billion-dollar investments while secretly plotting to grab the poor chicken’s leg piece. Meanwhile, chhotay bachay (a.k.a. teenage mutant ninja turtles) sprint across the hall as if it’s the Istanbul Marathon, leaving destruction in their wake. And of course, the ever-watchful aunties are scouting khoobsurat girls for their Hagemaru-like sons, who, let’s be honest, barely have three strands of hair holding on for dear life.

You’re nodding along, right? I can bet most of you are already picturing these scenarios in your head while suppressing the urge to lecture those ninja turtles. But hold on—this story takes a turn.

At one such shaadi, when I was just another carefree guest dodging aunties and the buffet rush, my boss spotted me. Yes, my boss. While others were busy scouting for brides, he was scouting for... employees and Like a fool, I walked right into a trap by agreeing to take up that job. Fast forward two years, and here I am—still stuck in the same job, now with a rant brewing in my heart.

The Workload Rollercoaster

Work at my office is so unpredictable, it could rival a desi soap opera’s “dhoom tananana” One week I’m binge-watching Netflix, wondering if I even have a job, and the next, I’m buried under nine cases of completely different nature. And let me tell you, these clients... Allah maaf kare. Why does every other person with a UK visa refusal wants to file a pre-action protocol? Bhai, wo log aapko nahi chahte, samajh jao! Kya annoying ex-boyfriend wali harkatein karni zaroori hain?

All of the above aside, I was planning to go on Denning’s national trip this February, but my boss had other plans. “BE AVAILABLE,” he said. Matlab boss maine apko bola ki hai? 🙄

Sweet dreams Salary Increment

Since it’s January, you know what time it is: salary increment season. But here’s the real suspense—do I get one without asking, or do I have to send that dreaded text? You know the one:

“Boss bossssss, can I please get an increment on my salary? I’m just a girl, pleaseee 🙏🙏🙏.”

I’m staring at the calendar right now, contemplating whether to ask before the 25th or let fate decide. Dua karo, Agar increment mil gaya toh treat meri taraf se!

Annoying Co-Workers: A Tragicomedy

Not every workplace horror story involves a tyrannical boss. In fact, some bosses are genuinely great, supportive, kind, and endlessly patient. The real villains of the office, however, are often hidden in plain sight: the coworkers. Yes, those seemingly pleasant colleagues who smile to your face but sharpen their knives the moment you turn around.

Now, let’s talk about the cherry-on-top: the clown co-workers. OH GOD, THESE PEOPLE!!!! Imagine this: I’m trying to focus on the case of R(Monica) v. DPP, when my colleague decides to blast a voice note from a paindu client on full volume. Aur us note mein kya hai? Absolutely nothing useful—just the client narrating how busy he’s been because, “behan k betay ki shaadi thi aur caterer ko order deyna tha.”

Next in line is the “Two-Faced Terry” an office staple. To your face, they’re a picture of warmth and camaraderie, but behind closed doors, they’re feeding your boss tales of your so-called “shortcomings” or vying for the spotlight by nitpicking your contributions.

Then there’s the classic “Conversation Interrupter,” that one coworker who magically appears in the middle of your chat with the boss to inject their two cents, just to sound smarter or more competent. It’s like a live audition for Office Idol, where the judges are always your superiors.

Let’s not forget “The Freshie” this one sits next to my cubicle but insists on lurking like he’s auditioning for Crime Patrol. My lord, can I call him a creep? Asking for a friend.

In Conclusion

Life as an underpaid, overworked employee is nothing short of a tragic comedy, sprinkled with desi chaos and existential dread. But hey, at least I can still rant about it.

The frustration, of course, isn’t just about the backstabbing or the constant need to watch your back. It’s the thought that work could be so much better if everyone simply focused on excelling at their own job instead of being “Credit Thief Carl” the one who waits for you to put in all the hard work before swooping in to claim the glory. Remember that Plaintiff you stayed up all night drafting? Somehow, Carl’s name ends up at the top of the presentation.

Imagine an office where coworkers collaborated instead of competed—a utopia where ideas are shared, not stolen, and conversations don’t feel like a battle of egos.

Until that day comes, we’ll keep seeing through the false niceties, dodging the verbal landmines, and silently hoping that karma has an express delivery service. Now if you’ll excuse me, I need to go draft that boss bossssss text and hope for a miracle.

Here’s to surviving another year of behan k betay ki shaadi jesay voice notes bhejne walay paindu clients and bosses who say, “BE AVAILABLE.”

A Unified Community

Denning Alumni Network:

A Bridge between Tradition and Progress

The Denning Alumni Network (DAN) represents a transformative initiative aimed at fostering lasting connections between Denning Law School and its alumni. With a well-defined policy framework, DAN ensures its operations align with the university's mission and values. As a hub of engagement, professional growth, and unity, the network highlights the enduring relationship between Denning and its graduates.

The mission of the Denning Alumni Network is twofold. Firstly, Building a Unified Community, Cultivating a dedicated alumni base that actively supports the objectives of Denning Law School while fostering a sense of pride and unity among graduates. Secondly, Operating as a Nonprofit Entity, DAN operates as a nonprofit organization focused on enhancing alumni well-being while maintaining a continuous and meaningful connection with Denning. This unique approach underscores the university's commitment to its alumni, ensuring that their personal and professional growth is supported throughout their journey.

The policy framework outlines several objectives that drive the network's operations. Ensuring that all alumni activities resonate with Denning's core mission and long-term vision. Moreover, upholding the highest standards of data security and confidentiality. Furthermore, celebrating the achievements of graduates who make significant contributions to their fields or communities and establishing strong communication channels, including newsletters, social media, and personalized updates. Organizing impactful events such as reunions, networking opportunities, and professional workshops. Offering resources, mentorship programs, and career development opportunities. Encouraging alumni to contribute to scholarships and other financial initiatives. Lastly, Strengthening collaboration between alumni and Denning to ensure mutual success.

The Denning Alumni Network is guided by a robust governance model designed to promote inclusivity, representation, and effective decision-making.

- Patron-in-Chief: The CEO of Denning, serving as the guiding force behind the network.
- Deputy Patron: The COO of Denning, ensuring smooth operational oversight.
- Governing Board (GB): Composed of presidents from national and international alumni chapters, fostering a global perspective.

Leadership Roles:

President: The elected representative and leader of DAN, responsible for representing alumni interests and overseeing initiatives.

Three Vice Presidents: Engagement: Strengthens alumni interaction and participation.

Research and Innovation: Develops new initiatives and strategies for network growth.

Endowment: Oversees financial contributions and fundraising efforts.

General Secretary: Heads alumni relations, ensuring seamless coordination and effective communication.

Eligibility criteria for each leadership position are detailed on the official Instagram account, allowing interested alumni to review the qualifications and apply accordingly. They also highlighted the membership guide lines.

DAN's membership policies are inclusive, designed to welcome all graduates into the fold while maintaining high standards of conduct.

- Eligibility: Open to all graduates of Denning campuses, ensuring a wide and diverse representation of alumni.
- Special Cases: Transfer students in good standing are also eligible to join the network.
- Membership Benefits: Access to exclusive resources, including professional development tools and mentorship programs. Invitations to events, webinars, and networking opportunities. Regular newsletters, updates, and job alerts tailored to alumni needs.
- Revocation of Membership: Membership may be revoked in cases of policy violations or legal misconduct, ensuring that the network maintains its integrity and professionalism.

Through its comprehensive policy framework, the Denning Alumni Network not only honors the legacy of its graduates but also empowers them to contribute meaningfully to the institution and their communities.

By fostering strategic collaborations, organizing impactful events, and supporting alumni achievements, DAN creates a network that thrives on shared values and collective success.

The eligibility criteria for leadership roles and further details about the network's initiatives can be found on the official Instagram account. This ensures transparency and accessibility, allowing alumni to take an active role in shaping the future of the network.

The Denning Alumni Network is more than an organization; it is a community that bridges the past, present, and future of Denning Law School. By prioritizing unity, professional growth, and mutual support, DAN serves as a testament to the enduring impact of a Denning education.

For alumni, it is an opportunity to stay connected, give back, and continue making a difference in the world while carrying forward the values instilled during their time at Denning.

A Day of Adventure: Denning Law Students Take on Bahria Adventure Land

On January 11th, 2025, over 150 students from Denning Law School stepped away from their demanding study routines for a day of fun at Bahria Adventure Land, organized by Dialogues at Denning. The trip promised laughter, adrenaline, and camaraderie – and delivered on all counts. To start, students gathered at Denning's PECHS campus at 2:00 PM, brimming with excitement. By 2:30 PM, a convoy of buses and cars departed, filled with Spotify playlists and chatter about the day ahead. After a smooth two-hour ride, the group arrived at the colorful and vibrant Bahria Adventure Land.

Thrills and Laughs

Inside the park, students dove into the excitement. Roller coasters thrilled, bumper cars sparked "legal" collisions, and the haunted house had everyone screaming – and laughing – in turns. Some explored VR gaming and arcade zones, while others strolled the park, snapping Instagram-worthy photos and daring each other to try the wildest rides.

A Disappointing Feast

After hours of fun, hunger hit hard, and the group made their way to Caféla at Bahria Carnival for dinner. Expectations were high, but the meal left many unimpressed. The menu, reminiscent of a standard wedding buffet, felt repetitive for students coming off the December wedding season. While some joked that the biryani deserved a 10/10 kawwa biryani rating, most agreed the dinner fell short of capping off the day's excitement.

Heading Home

By 8:00 PM, it was time to head back. The ride home was quieter, with students scrolling through photos and dozing off. By 9:00 PM, the group returned to the PECHS campus, exchanging farewells and promises of future adventures.

A Memorable Escape

Despite the dinner letdown, the day was a roaring success – a perfect pause to bond, recharge, and create unforgettable memories. Dialogues at Denning once again proved its knack for pulling off exciting events, leaving everyone eagerly awaiting the next adventure.

Denning announces National Trip 2025: "A journey to remember"

Pack your bags and prepare for the adventure of a lifetime! Denning proudly announces its much-anticipated national trip, offering students an unforgettable journey through the scenic wonders of Pakistan.

From February 21st to February 27th, 2025, participants will embark on a thrilling exploration of Swat, Malam Jabba, and Nathiagali, three of the country's most breathtaking destinations.

This annual trip promises not only spectacular views but also cherished memories with friends that will last a lifetime.

Whether you're an adrenaline junkie eager to ski down the snowy slopes of Malam Jabba, a nature lover excited to trek through the lush forests of Nathiagali, or simply someone who wants to unwind by the serene rivers of Swat, this trip has something special for everyone.

At a cost of PKR 140,000 per head, the package includes comfortable travel, quality accommodation, and exciting group activities.

Third-year students, this is your moment! Don't miss out on an opportunity to bond with your peers and create stories that will be recounted for years to come.

Cycle for a Cause

Pedaling together for a wholesome motive!

This past Sunday, January 19, 2025, the vibrant streets of Phase 8 came alive with the spirit of charity and determination. Denning Public Services organized the much-anticipated "Cycle for a Cause," a charity cycling event that saw an impressive turnout of approximately 150 students. The event aimed to raise funds for dialysis patients, proving once again that community spirit and goodwill go hand in hand.

The event kicked off early, with participants gathering at the Denning Consultancy Campus at 7:30 AM. After a hearty breakfast of patties, anda paratha, and energy drinks to fuel the journey, the first batch of cyclists hit the road at 8:00 AM. The cycling route stretched from the campus to the serene Golf Club, and participants were divided into three batches to ensure smooth execution.

What truly made this event special was its seamless organization and thoughtful provisions. Water stalls dotted the cycling track, ensuring participants stayed hydrated, while volunteers in cars followed the cyclists, ready to assist anyone who needed a break. Such meticulous planning underscored the commitment of Denning Public Services to creating a safe and enjoyable experience.

Adding to the day's excitement, the lead cyclist was a distinguished alumnus, inspiring participants with their dedication and enthusiasm. The event also featured a health stall by the Integrated Psychology Clinic (IPC) and a pre-cycling workout session conducted by Trifit, setting the tone for a spirited morning.

Tickets for the event were priced at Rs. 1500, a modest contribution towards a noble cause. The primary objective of raising funds for dialysis patients was successfully met, leaving participants with a sense of accomplishment and purpose.

"Cycle for a Cause" wasn't just about cycling; it was about uniting the community for a greater good. The event combined fun, fitness, and philanthropy in a way that left a lasting impression on everyone involved. A special appreciation goes to Denning Public Services for their unwavering commitment to organizing impactful events that make a difference.

As the cyclists pedaled their way to the Golf Club, they weren't just covering miles, they were paving the way for hope and better health for those in need. Here's to many more initiatives like this!

Denning Legal Clinic's trip to Hyderabad From Courtrooms to Jail Cells!

Wednesday, January 15, 2025, began with sleepy faces and hesitant smiles as students gathered at the PECHS campus at 6:30 AM. The bus driver, proving maps can be a challenge, got lost, leaving Sir Ibad to rescue him. Despite the groggy start, the excitement grew as students clambered aboard, jostling for seats. The unofficial trip DJ soon took over, energizing everyone with a mix of music that set the tone for the day. (Oh, and to the three students left behind for being late sorry, but rules are rules!)

At 8:15 AM, a collective need for a break brought the bus to a halt at a roadside shop. Stocking up on snacks and water, the students sprawled on charpais for a classic breakfast of chana, paratha, and chai. Refreshed, they resumed their journey, the chatter and laughter filling the bus.

The first major stop was the High Court of Hyderabad, where students toured the historic building, mingled with lawyers in the Bar Room, and attended a hearing that highlighted the perils of courtroom decorum. It was an eye-opener for future advocates, offering lessons in both law and humility as they witnessed what happens when a lawyer disrespects the judge.

The next stops were the Sessions Court and Civil Court, brief but insightful visits before heading to the picturesque Denning Law School's Hyderabad campus for lunch where the students enjoyed a break that seamlessly blended relaxation with academic curiosity.

The highlight of the trip was the Central Jail of Hyderabad. Here, the students observed the court of an Additional District and Sessions Judge, who shared fascinating anecdotes about really cool cases (only cool for us law students). They toured the prison, exploring the loom factory, kitchen, woodwork area, and Al-Khidmat's Skill Development Center. Inmates' handcrafted products, from calligraphy to repaired electronics, stunned the students with their quality. Even more inspiring was learning that sales proceeds support the inmates' needs, a testament to rehabilitation through skill-building.

As the sun set, the students began their return journey, stopping for chai along the way. Obviously they did not stop vibing and proceeded to create reels and sing along to songs on the way back. Exhausted but content, they reached PECHS campus, carrying memories of camaraderie, laughter, and newfound knowledge.

The trip wasn't just a law students' excursion; it was a journey of bonding, perspective, and stepping beyond the bubble of everyday life. Broken slippers and aching feet aside, it was an experience none will forget.

Guilty as Sketched

Denning Meow Club

MEET SNOOZY!

This is Sir Snoozy and he wasn't always a celebrity in the seaview campus. In his youth, he was an elusive operative in the covert Feline Intelligence Agency (FIA). Known for his sleek black-and-white coat that made him blend into shadows, he became a legend for infiltrating the cafeteria and uncovering the infamous "Chicken Nugget Heist." With unmatched stealth, he evaded countless security guards and even outsmarted the students using his cute-cat privilege.

But Sir Snoozy wasn't just about espionage. Rumor has it that he had a brief stint as a model for cat food commercials, where his photogenic face captivated millions. Fame didn't suit him, though, and he returned to campus life, seeking simplicity and solitude. These days he spends his time lounging around, perfecting the art of relaxation. Don't let his lazy demeanor fool you though, Sir Snoozy still keeps a watchful eye on the campus. His "nap mode" is just a clever cover for his ongoing investigation for a secret unlimited cat-food stash. If you pass by him, give him a nod of respect, but remember, his work is classified. And if you find him sleeping, know this, he's just pretending. Probably!

MEET SNOWBELL!

Meet Snowbell, she may seem like an ordinary kitten snoozing in a flowerpot, but don't be fooled, she's the busiest student on campus. She's juggling Feline Studies 101, Mouse History, and an advanced seminar on The Art of Napping. Her calendar is so packed that she's become a regular at the Java coffee shop (they keep her milk chilled). However she is definitely guilty for catching a nap during lectures but she cannot help it.

Despite her hectic academic life, she is known for her calming presence around campus, whether comforting stressed-out students or meowing encouragingly outside the library.

She's become the unofficial morale booster for the campus. Rumor has it she's planning to run for executive council, her campaign slogan is "More naps, fewer exams!" After attending back-to-back classes all day, Snowbell takes well-deserved breaks in her flowerpot, which she calls her thinking chair. Passersby might assume she's just lazy, but her fans know she's brainstorming her next big idea; a guide to balancing work, life, and sleep. If you spot her napping, give her a wink, she's not just resting, she's recharging for her next brilliant adventure.

MEET POOKIE!

At first glance, Pookie might appear like the kind of cat who rules the PECHS campus, his steely gaze and confident stride say, "Don't mess with me." He struts around like he's the toughest cat in the alley, but if you get close enough, you'll discover that underneath that tough exterior is a softie who lives for playtime and belly rubs.

Pookie's favorite pastime? Pouncing on anything that moves. He's been known to chase after fallen leaves, dust bunnies, and his personal favorite; crumpled paper balls.

Students love watching his dramatic antics, especially when he leaps into the air, only to land with a perfectly timed somersault. Pookie is always on a look-out for friendly students and when he finds one, he loves to rubs against their legs.

When he's not busy saving the campus from rogue leaves, Pookie's all about the pats. He'll headbutt your leg until you give in and offer some love, and once he's had his fill, he'll reward you with the most relaxed purr. So, while he may look like he could bench-press a car, Rocky's true strength lies in his heart and his ability to melt into a puddle of fluff with just a few strokes.

MEET THE CUTEST FAMILY!

Every campus has its legends, and last year, ours came with fur, whiskers, and unmatched charisma. Meet Mama Cat, the matriarch of the trio. A seasoned scavenger, she prowled the cafeteria like a professional food critic, securing snacks for her two kittens. Whether it was a stray fry or an abandoned sandwich, she always made sure her little family was well-fed and ready for the next adventure.

First, there's Tom, the introverted thinker of the group. Shy and reserved, Tom rarely left his mama's side, preferring the quiet company of his mama over the bustling energy of campus life. With his wide, curious eyes, he spent his days observing students and contemplating deep, mysterious questions, like why humans carry books but never chew on them.

Tom was the soul of calm in their chaotic trio. And then there's Jerry, the grey tabby who never met a human he didn't like. Jerry was a social butterfly, darting between groups of students and demanding head scratches like a tiny furry celebrity. He loved the attention and was always ready to charm his way into an extra treat or two.

This year, the PECHS campus feels a little emptier without them. Their absence has left students wondering where did they go? Perhaps they've moved on to conquer new territories or maybe, just maybe, they'll make a surprise comeback. Until then, their legend lives on, immortalized in the stories shared by those who knew them.

Student Spotlight

Mr. Umair Irfan Gadit: A Rising Star in Law and Education

Born in Karachi into a family of industrialists and legal professionals, Mr. Umair Irfan Gadit had the unique opportunity to explore diverse career paths before pursuing law. His early exposure to both industries shaped his multifaceted personality, enabling him to excel academically and professionally.

From a young age, Mr. Umair demonstrated exceptional academic prowess, earning numerous awards and certifications in diverse fields such as Law, Sciences, IT, Sports, Public Speaking, and E-Gaming. His ability to balance these disciplines while achieving remarkable results set the foundation for his future successes.

Academic Journey and Association with Denning Law School

Mr. Umair's journey with Denning Law School began even before his enrollment. In 2022, he was awarded Best Delegate (BD) for Pakistan National Assembly at the 3rd Model United Nations (MUN) competition hosted by Denning, cementing his affiliation with the institution.

Despite receiving admission offers from prestigious universities like Queen Mary, Cardiff, and Bristol, he chose to study at Denning Law School. This decision aligned with his goal of obtaining an internationally recognized Bachelor of Laws (LLB) degree from the University of London while gaining practical experience in Karachi's vibrant legal landscape.

During his first year at Denning, Mr. Umair was selected for the highly esteemed Denning Legal Clinic (DLC). As Director of Legal Affairs & Public Relations, he has led the clinic for two consecutive years. His leadership has been instrumental in organizing the Second Denning National Moot Championship and hosting prominent legal figures. He has also earned accolades such as Best Speaker and Runner-Up in intra-campus competitions.

Professional Achievements and Legal Contributions

Mr. Umair's contributions to the legal field extend far beyond the classroom. He completed the Denning Summer Internship Drive, where he worked on cases involving criminal, civil, property, family, FIA, and PECA matters. Additionally, his pro-bono work with the nonprofit Revival of Change focused on juvenile justice and other social causes, earning him recognition within the legal community.

Currently, Mr. Umair serves as a Legal Associate at the Advocate General Sindh's Office, specializing in High Court civil and land matters. Under the mentorship of seasoned professionals, including his grandfather Mr. Iqbal Memon and Senator Farooq H. Naeq, he has gained extensive litigation experience. He has represented clients in District Courts, the High Court of Sindh, NAB Courts, and Anti-Corruption Courts, handling a wide array of cases.

His contributions have also been acknowledged at legal forums, including a recent seminar on Wakeel.AI, where he was invited as a Guest Speaker alongside Supreme Court Advocates such as Mr. Yaseen Azad.

A Passion for Legal Education

In addition to his legal practice, Mr. Umair has carved a niche for himself as a legal educator. He began his teaching career in 2023 with a small evening batch at Gravity Institute. Within six months, his reputation as an effective and inspiring mentor earned him affiliations with esteemed institutions such as Titan College, Meritorious College, and Foundation Public School.

Through platforms like Askari Institute, BODMAS, and Learned Guys, he has conducted online sessions and mentored over 200 students. His innovative teaching style and commitment to student success have made him a highly sought-after educator in both academic and professional circles.

Mr. Umair's passion for legal education culminated in the launch of Titan Legal Counsel (TLC). This initiative empowers A-Level students with practical legal knowledge and skills. TLC's activities, including seminars, publications, and podcasts, have established it as a benchmark for legal education. Its success has inspired similar initiatives across various institutions, solidifying Mr. Umair's legacy in academia.

Vision for the Future

As a fifth-generation lawyer from a family of barristers, judges, and bureaucrats, Mr. Umair is deeply committed to upholding his family's legacy while carving out his own path. His vision includes establishing a private legal chamber, focusing on both litigation and corporate law, and continuing to contribute to the field of legal education.

With nearly 300 students mentored in just two years, Mr. Umair's influence extends far beyond the courtroom. Through his dedication, humility, and modern approach to teaching, he has set a new standard for excellence in both law and education.

Life hacks and Local wisdom

Words; a concept

A small word, comprising of only five alphabets, holds power that stretches beyond mere human comprehension.

It not only has the ability to destroy one's perception of life but also can lead shrewd to acquire great fortune. However, it solely depends on its use. With confidence, people will listen to fools with great deliberation, that is also true when it comes to strong conviction in some texts. The greatest example is the conviction in the first verse of the Bible "In the beginning there was the word, and the word was with God, and the word is God." These words are so powerful that it creates a sense of belief for believers and it literally makes them manifest the life they want by simply strongly believing in these words in the absence of any form of miracle.

Without a doubt, words serve the purpose of a double edged sword. It can either destroy a person by placing an invisible curse on them or can make their life easier as well. It, again, depends on its delivery and the words used. Word is not just a sound or a written symbol, it is a force and a power which can alter the events in your life significantly.

Many years ago in Germany, a man had placed a small seed of fear in the hearts of people and had led them against each other. There were major wars and great genocides. All Hitler had to do was activate people's fears with his words and he had achieved more than he ever could. Furthermore, on a surface level, if a person tells you "I have seen people die when they have a certain kind of color to their faces." Now a person who had heard it would live the rest of their lives in fear of dying early because of the words used and with the conviction it was used.

It is pertinent that we also discover what being "impeccable" with your words mean. This word comes from Latin peccatus, which means "without sin." Putting religion aside, anything a person does that goes against him is considered a sin. A person is impeccable when he does the opposite and takes accountability of his actions. Similarly, not doing so would lead to altering someone else's life ahead. An example would be of a loving and cherishing mother who had a tough day at work and shouts at her daughter to stop singing because her voice was not "good." Although those words were said inadvertently without any malicious intentions, the daughter, if decided to believe, would never sing again as now she had formed an agreement in her mind. This will now affect her like black magic, a looming veil on her head that would not let her put faith in her singing again, unless she forms a new agreement due to someone who uses their words impeccably.

Another great example of not using words impeccably is "Gossip", a person would go on spreading lies about someone he barely knows, this creates the perfect example of transferring poison.

An example would be a student telling others that the teacher in front of you is a pervert and a jerk of a person. Now without thinking, whenever that teacher comes around, the student would think of him as a villain and a bad person while in reality all of that can be a total lie.

Like a computer virus, it spreads in no time.

A little piece of information can break down communication between people, causing every person it touches to become infected and contagious to others. Each time when someone gossips, in order to free that poison from your head you just pass on that information mindlessly. Ultimately using your words for a bad cause. Most of the time, in order to satisfy your own ego a person would go sound gossip and spread hate just to satisfy their own ego and prove your own people wrong.

A person also hurts himself on a daily basis by using words that degrade one's achievements, looks and life in general. Thus, it is essential that a person becomes impeccable with their own words. A person will only form a negative agreement in their head when it is a fertile ground for such to bloom.

On the contrary when a person becomes impeccable with their own words, they manifest the very same lifestyle by not letting that poison get to them. When a person becomes an epitome of love and care, automatically the brain avoids such attacks by someone else and thus, a person starts viewing the world as a ground for love rather than hate.

Therefore, the strength a person gains with impeccability of words is limitless. It can turn one's life around and provide personal freedom, to huge success and abundance. A person will transcend the dream of fear and live a different life.

He will live in heaven amongst people living in hell because you're immune to hell, only by agreement: Be impeccable with your words.

Honda and Nissan's $54 Billion Merger

A historic comeback or a desperate gamble to stay afloat in the electric age?"

Honda and Nissan have unveiled plans for a historic $54 billion merger, with Mitsubishi considering joining by January 2025, which could raise the deal's value to $58 billion. If finalized, this merger will create the world's third-largest automaker, trailing only Toyota and Volkswagen, and mark the largest automotive merger in Japan's history. The deal is set to conclude by August 2026, and this strategic partnership is driven by the need to counter the growing dominance of Chinese automakers in the electric vehicle (EV) and autonomous driving markets. Honda CEO Toshihiro Mibe stressed the urgency of strengthening their competitive edge by 2030. The global EV market is anticipated to expand by nearly 30% in 2024, while the autonomous vehicle market is projected to reach $448.6 billion by 2035.

The merger aims to leverage the strengths of both companies to optimize operations and reinforce market standing. By standardizing vehicle platforms, Honda and Nissan plan to enhance efficiency, lower costs, and accelerate development across internal combustion, hybrid, plug-in hybrid, and electric models. This integration will refine products such as Honda's CR-V and Accord and Nissan's Pathfinder and Armada, catering to diverse customer needs globally. Their combined research and development efforts will focus on next-generation software-defined vehicles (SDVs), expected to reduce development costs by over 20% while advancing technological capabilities. These initiatives align with their goal of achieving more than ¥3 trillion in annual operating profit.

Honda aims to leverage Nissan's underutilized factories and expertise in large SUVs to diversify and expand its product portfolio, while Nissan seeks financial stability after a turbulent period marked by a 90% decline in earnings last year, which led to significant layoffs. Nissan's challenges date back to the 2018 arrest of its former CEO, Carlos Ghosn, on charges of financial misconduct. The merger news has drawn criticism from Ghosn, who, in an interview with Bloomberg, described Nissan as being in "panic mode." He labeled the deal a "desperate move" and questioned the feasibility of synergies between the two automakers.

Despite Ghosn's skepticism, Honda's advanced hybrid technology presents a promising opportunity to be integrated into Nissan's larger vehicles, enabling both companies to capitalize on growth potential in the increasingly competitive hybrid and electric vehicle markets. This collaboration could enhance Nissan's market presence while driving innovation and operational efficiency.

Manufacturing efficiencies are also a priority, with plans to share production lines and optimize facilities to increase capacity utilization and cut fixed costs by 15% to 20%. Consolidated procurement operations will enable the companies to source shared components and collaborate more effectively with suppliers, potentially saving ¥500 billion annually. Additional cost reductions will come from integrating systems and standardizing operational processes, with back-office expenses expected to decrease by ¥200 billion each year.

Honda and Nissan will create a new joint holding company through a joint share transfer, which will serve as the parent entity for both automakers. This plan is subject to shareholder approval and regulatory clearances. The holding company will support and develop both brands while preserving their unique identities and market presence.

The joint holding company is set to list on the Prime Market of the Tokyo Stock Exchange (TSE) by August 2026. Once listed, Honda and Nissan will become wholly owned subsidiaries and will be delisted from the TSE. Shareholders of Honda and Nissan will receive equivalent shares in the holding company, which will remain tradable on the TSE. All listing and delisting dates will comply with TSE regulations.

Business Integration Timeline

- December 23, 2024: Board of Directors' resolution and signing of the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU).
- June 2025: Execution of the definitive agreement, including the share transfer plan.
- April 2026: Extraordinary shareholders' meetings to approve the share transfer.
- End of July to August 2026: Delisting of Honda and Nissan from the TSE.
- August 2026: Share transfer takes effect, and the joint holding company is listed on the TSE.

Note: The timeline is tentative and may change due to procedural or regulatory factors. Any changes will be promptly announced.

Honda will have significant influence over the management of the joint holding company, nominating the majority of both internal and external directors. The President and Representative Director, or the President and Representative Executive Officer, will also be selected from Honda's nominees. While the Honda-Nissan merger offers significant opportunities, several challenges loom over its successful execution. Nissan's history of leadership scandals and financial setbacks raises questions about its long-term stability. Additionally, the potential for shifts in U.S. tariff policies under Donald Trump could further complicate manufacturing operations and inflate production costs, creating additional hurdles for both companies. Mitsubishi's potential involvement in the merger introduces an additional layer of uncertainty. While the brand could gain access to an expanded distribution network, there's a real risk that it may lose its distinct identity in the process. While models like the Outlander have seen modest success, other offerings, such as the Eclipse and Mirage, have faced criticism, limiting the brand's appeal. If Mitsubishi joins the merger, its commercial vehicle lineup, particularly in the U.S., could be at risk of discontinuation. This could further complicate its integration into the broader strategic goals of the merger, especially if the company's weaker models are phased out in favor of more competitive options from Honda or Nissan. These concerns highlight the delicate balance required to ensure the merger delivers its promised benefits while navigating these challenges.

“NOT A SNOWBALL’S CHANCE IN HELL”

Trudeau’s rejection of the Trump’s 51st State Fantasy

By Rehman Ali Kalhoro

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has unequivocally dismissed former U.S. President Donald Trump’s suggestion that Canada might become the 51st state of the United States. In response to Trump’s provocative remarks, Trudeau reaffirmed Canada’s sovereignty and the pride Canadians take in their distinct national identity.

Trump, known for his bold and often contentious statements, recently revived the idea of reshaping North America’s borders, even suggesting that Canada could be annexed by the United States. Speaking at a press conference in Florida, Trump referred to the U.S.-Canada border as an “artificially drawn line” and argued that eliminating it could enhance national security and economic cooperation. “Canada and the United States together would really be something,” Trump declared, going as far as to refer to Trudeau as “Governor Trudeau,” implying a hypothetical role as a U.S. state leader.

Trudeau swiftly and decisively rejected Trump’s proposition. During an interview on MSNBC’s Inside with Jen Psaki, Trudeau stated, “It’s not going to happen. Canadians are incredibly proud of being Canadian, and that pride defines us.” He emphasized that the idea of Canada becoming part of the U.S. is entirely implausible, adding that there is “not a snowball’s chance in hell” of such a scenario. On social media platform X (formerly Twitter), Trudeau posted, “Canada’s sovereignty is non-negotiable. We are proud to stand tall as an independent nation.”

Trump’s remarks come amidst ongoing trade tensions between the two countries. His administration had previously threatened to impose a 25% tariff on Canadian imports, a move that could significantly impact Canada’s economy, which relies on the U.S. as its primary trading partner for 75% of its exports.

Trudeau expressed concern about the potential economic fallout, stating, “These tariffs would hurt not just Canadians but also Americans, who would face higher prices on goods like electricity and oil.”

The idea of annexation faces overwhelming opposition in Canada. Canadian provinces are fiercely protective of their autonomy, with distinct cultural and political identities that resist the idea of integration into the U.S. system. For instance:

Quebec: The province’s francophone identity and history of separatist movements make it particularly resistant to any suggestion of integration with the U.S.

Western Provinces: Regions like Alberta and Saskatchewan, rich in natural resources, often view federal oversight skeptically and would likely balk at the idea of submitting to Washington’s authority.

Moreover, Canada’s political landscape, characterized by a multiparty system and decentralized governance, stands in stark contrast to the U.S.’s binary political framework and centralized federal power. Annexation would also raise significant cultural and legal challenges:

- Bilingualism: Canada’s commitment to bilingualism, particularly the rights of francophones, would clash with the predominantly English-speaking U.S.
- Indigenous Rights: Canada’s constitutionally enshrined rights for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples could be jeopardized under U.S. governance, potentially sparking widespread resistance.

Trudeau highlighted that Canadians often define their national identity in opposition to American culture, stating, “When asked what it means to be Canadian, many will simply say, ‘We’re not Americans.’”

This affable anti-Americanism, coupled with a deep-seated sense of independence, remains a unifying force for Canadians.

Political analysts argue that Trump’s suggestion may be more about generating headlines than a serious policy proposal.

However, the notion underscores the complexities of U.S.-Canada relations, which are often shaped by economic interdependence and cultural differences. Incorporating Canada into the U.S. would not only disrupt existing political institutions but also risk alienating a populace deeply committed to its sovereignty.

Canada’s sovereignty, cultural identity, and distinct political framework ensure that it will continue to stand apart as a proud and independent nation.
